Funny how all the “spikes” in vote counting happened exactly in the critical swing states where they were needed

Funny how all the “spikes” in vote counting happened exactly in the critical swing states where they were needed.

This is the conclusion from a very long article, which has lot of math, graphs, and charts.

<https://votepatternanalysis.substack.com/p/voting-anomalies-2020>

This report studies 8,954 individual updates to the vote totals in all 50 states and finds that four individual updates — two of which were widely noticed on the internet, including by the President — are profoundly anomalous; they deviate from a pattern which is otherwise found in the vast majority of the remaining 8,950 vote updates. The findings presented by this report suggest that four vote count updates — which collectively were decisive in Michigan, Wisconsin, and Georgia, and thus decisive of a critical forty-two electoral votes — are especially anomalous and merit further investigation.

In particular, the finding that the broader data follows general patterns and our ability to measure just how much any individual vote update does — or doesn't — follow this pattern allows us to make concrete claims about both how extreme any given vote update is and about what any particular vote update might have looked like, had it been less extreme one one axis or another.

We further find that if these updates were only more extreme than 99% of all updates nationally in terms of their deviation from this generally-observed pattern, that, holding all else equal, Joe Biden may very well have lost the states of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Georgia, and that he would have 42 fewer Electoral votes — putting Biden below the number required to win the Presidency. Either way, it is indisputable that his margin of victory in these three states relies on four most anomalous vote updates identified by the metric developed in this report.

We once again note that this analysis is largely restricted to four individual vote updates out of a sample of nearly 9,000. This report by no means suggests stopping investigations in Michigan, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania, Georgia, or elsewhere; it is merely that these four key ballot updates are both profoundly anomalous with respect to a metric which removes any component of different states having different partisan leanings or a different number of voters. Furthermore, this analysis does not require that we regard the final vote totals in any of these states (or counties thereof) as suspicious, nor, critically, does it require that we accept that the observed data should follow any particular distribution a priori. We merely show that the data, adjusted appropriately to remove differences in size and political leaning between states, does follow a certain pattern, and that four key vote updates deviate profoundly from that pattern.

It is our belief that the extraordinarily anomalous nature of the studied vote updates here, combined with the staggering political implications, demands immediate and thorough investigation.

I wish I had a chart of those voting spikes to compare the time they occurred. It would be a glaring signal if they did spike in unison.

Coincidence

Swing states

Same time

Same candidate

Only urban areas

Same outcome

Poll worker harassment

State and fed laws broken

But yeah, other than those coincidences it's just random. All hail Soros!

Great evidence uncovered for those with "eyes to see and ears to hear." Otherwise, they say, "No evidence."

And only in one direction.

Why hasn't Harris-the-Whore resigned from her senate seat?

I tried googling "which states suspended ballot counting on election night 2020" and naturally got nothing.

VIDEO: 7min: 26 Nov: Sky News Australia: Trump should 'continue legal fight' because there is 'industrial scale fraud' - Alan Jones Show

Eminent law professor David Flint says President Donald Trump should continue his legal fight for as long as he can because not only is there industrial scale voter fraud at hand, but also the question of unequal protection of voters.

"It's not just fraud, and the fraud is not just self-evident, it would be self-evident to a rookie journalist," Professor Flint told Sky News host Alan Jones.

"I can't understand why journalists are throwing around the word 'unsubstantiated' when they didn't in relation to the many charges made against President Trump." Professor Flint said there is "not only fraud – which is on an industrial scale" but there is also the question of "unequal protection, and that is that voters are being treated differently".

"There's been a lot of unlawful changes to the electoral laws, the power to change the laws is vested in the state legislators and it's often forgotten that they have a primary role," he said.

"But governors and secretaries of state have tried to change the laws, it's ineffective."

No, not funny. (Although I know what you meant.)

Obvious and irrefutable felonies against American citizens and the republic.

This is our fault as American citizens. We allowed this criminality to fester throughout the federal (and now state and local) government for far too long, as it began in earnest in 1995. We had 25 years to stop it.

We have only to blame ourselves.
